Partnership Celebrates Primary Care Providers Helping Patients Stay Healthy

FAIRFIELD – From catching health problems early to helping patients manage chronic conditions, primary care providers play an important role in keeping communities healthy. Partnership HealthPlan of California celebrated 37 medical practices that excel at providing this care during its annual quality awards ceremony.

The recognized practices participate in Partnership's Primary Care Provider Quality Incentive Program, which rewards healthcare providers for helping patients get the care they need. This includes routine health screenings, managing conditions such as diabetes and high blood pressure, and making sure patients receive follow-up care after a hospital visit.

Preventive care can make a significant difference in patients' lives. Regular screenings can help detect conditions such as cancer early, when treatment may be more effective. Managing high blood pressure can also reduce the risk of serious health problems, including heart attacks and strokes. For children, regular checkups help providers monitor growth and development and identify potential concerns early.

The number of top-performing providers has grown significantly over the past three years, increasing from eight in 2023 to 21 in 2024 and 37 in 2025 (the measurement year for the recent awards). This reflects continued progress among participating providers in meeting important healthcare quality goals.

"Behind every quality measure is a person who deserves access to high-quality health care," said Partnership CEO Sonja Bjork. "Whether it's helping someone manage a chronic condition or making sure a child receives preventive care, our providers make a difference in people's lives every day. We're proud to recognize their commitment to the communities we serve."

Through the Primary Care Provider Quality Incentive Program, Partnership offers financial rewards and support to healthcare practices that meet important healthcare quality goals. These goals focus on areas such as preventive screenings, chronic disease management, children's health, patient experience, and follow-up care. Practices that earn at least 90% of their available quality incentive points are recognized as top performers.

At the August 26 ceremony, Chief Medical Officer Robert Moore, MD, presented awards to the recognized providers. The program encourages healthcare practices to share successful approaches to improving patient care, helping more people benefit from these efforts.

Partnership also provides participating providers with tools to track their progress and identify opportunities to improve care. These tools help providers compare their performance with other practices across Partnership's network and learn where they can make the greatest difference for patients.
