Introduction

Liquidation (or winding-up) is the dissolution procedure for companies under English law. In that sense, it might be thought akin to Chapter 7 in the United States. (“Bankruptcy” is a term applied only to individuals in England, never to companies.) It is a procedure of last resort and involves a liquidator being appointed to take control of the company and to collect, realise and distribute its assets. Shareholders, creditors and the court have different degrees of control depending on the type of liquidation. Once the process has been completed, the company is dissolved.

Liquidation can take one of two forms: voluntary liquidation (either a members’ voluntary liquidation or a creditors’ voluntary liquidation, both of which are commenced by a resolution of the shareholders) or compulsory liquidation, commenced by the presentation of a winding-up petition in court and a winding-up order subsequently being made.

Voluntary liquidation

Voluntary liquidation is an insolvency procedure whereby a company, acting through its shareholders, instigates its own liquidation to wind up its affairs. The approval or sanction of the court is not required for a voluntary liquidation. Instead, the liquidation commences when a resolution supported by at least 75% of the shareholders present and voting is passed. Before passing a resolution for winding-up, notice must be given to any holder of a “qualifying floating charge” to give the charge holder the opportunity to appoint an administrator or administrative receiver (if permitted).

While a company is subject to the statutory moratorium under Part A1 of the Insolvency Act 1986, no resolution may be passed for voluntary liquidation unless it is recommended by the directors.

More detail on the statutory moratorium can be found in the England and Wales - Moratorium factsheet available here.

A voluntary liquidation can either be a members' voluntary liquidation (MVL) or a creditors' voluntary liquidation (CVL). An MVL is available only to a company that is solvent and, in this sense, it is not an “insolvency” procedure. Prior to the passing of the shareholders' resolution, a majority of the directors are required to make a statutory declaration as to the company's solvency stating that, in their opinion, formed after having made a full enquiry into the company's affairs, the company will be able to pay its debts in full together with interest within 12 months.¹ If the directors are willing to make the declaration then the liquidation proceeds as an MVL, however, if they are not, then the liquidation proceeds as a CVL.

While in an MVL, the shareholders nominate the liquidator, in a CVL, the directors are required to seek the nomination of a liquidator from the company's creditors. The decision of the creditors must be sought using the deemed consent procedure (essentially treating a decision as having been made unless 10% or more by value of creditors object to it) or by holding a virtual meeting – if the deemed consent procedure is used but the requisite number of creditors object, a physical meeting must be held. The decision must be made within 14 days following the shareholders' resolution to wind up the company. Before the relevant decision date for the creditors' nomination of a liquidator, the directors are required to deliver to the creditors a sworn statement as to the affairs of the company.

If at any time during an MVL, the liquidator is of the opinion that the company will be unable to pay its debts in full, then the MVL converts to a CVL and the creditors may nominate another liquidator. The creditors' choice of liquidator will displace anyone nominated by the members.

Compulsory liquidation

Alternatively, the company, the directors or a creditor (including a prospective or contingent creditor) may present a petition to the court for a compulsory winding-up. The petition to the court has to be based on one or more specified grounds including the inability of the company to pay its debts.² If the company is unable to pay its debts then the court will usually make a winding-up order, though the court has discretion on whether to make the order or not.

The court's discretion when presented with a petition to place a company into compulsory liquidation is wide. The court can make any order it thinks fit, including to stay any petition. For example, the court may take into account whether or not the debt is disputed in good faith, whether the company has a genuine cross-claim against the petitioner, whether the company has the ability to raise additional funding, and whether or not the petition is an abuse of process.

While a company is subject to the statutory moratorium under Part A1 of the Insolvency Act 1986, no petition may be presented for the winding up of the company (nor order made) except on an application by the directors.

Generally, the conduct of a compulsory liquidation is subject to a greater degree of control by the court than a voluntary liquidation. However, in a voluntary as well as a compulsory liquidation, interested parties such as the liquidator, contributory or creditor can apply to the court to determine questions arising in the winding up or to confirm, reverse or modify any act or decision of the liquidator or otherwise exercise any power that the court might exercise in a compulsory winding up.

² It is also possible for the courts to order the compulsory liquidation of a company on certain other prescribed grounds, including if the court thinks that it is just and equitable to do so.

Effect of liquidation

In both a voluntary liquidation and a compulsory liquidation, the powers of the directors cease (subject to certain possible exceptions in the case of a voluntary liquidation). The company retains legal title to its assets but loses beneficial ownership, with the beneficial title instead held on trust for the company's creditors.

The effect of a liquidation on claims against the company is broadly as follows:

- Security and proprietary rights against the company are unaffected and remain enforceable and entry into liquidation will bring to an end any statutory moratorium under Part A1 of the Insolvency Act 1986, allowing creditors to enforce their security;
- Entry into liquidation triggers the ban on the operation of ipso facto clauses contained in section 233B of the Insolvency Act 1986. More detail on this can be found in the “England and Wales – Overview” factsheet available here.
- In a compulsory winding-up, once the winding-up order has been made, no action or proceedings can be commenced or proceeded with against the company or its property without the leave of the court. Although there is no equivalent automatic statutory provision in the case of a creditors' voluntary liquidation, the liquidator may apply to the court for a stay of such proceedings to ensure an equal distribution of the company's property; and
- Claims against the company are crystallised as at the date of liquidation and the proof of debt mechanism referred to below comes into play including the mandatory set-off provision.

Where a company has entered insolvent liquidation (i.e. creditors voluntary or compulsory liquidation), any directors or shadow directors of that company who have acted in that capacity within the preceeding 12 months are prohibited (for a period of 5 years from the date the company goes into insolvent liquidation) from being directors of any company, or being involved in the the promotion, formation or management of any company or business, where that company or business is known by a “prohibited name”. A “prohibited name” is one that is the same as the name of the insolvent company, or one so similar as to suggest an association with that company. There are certain limited exceptions - including where the relevant person has obtained the prior approval of the court, or if the person gives notice to all creditors of the insolvent company before they act in contravention. A failure to comply with these restrictions can result in criminal and/or civil liabilities, and may also lead to a personal liability for certain debts of the “successor” company.

Role of the liquidator

Regardless of whether the liquidation takes the form of a compulsory liquidation or a creditors' voluntary liquidation, the liquidator's role is to wind up the affairs of the company; get in and realise the assets of the company; agree creditors' claims; and distribute the asset realisations in the statutory order of priority.

The liquidator's duties are owed to the general body of creditors and shareholders.

The liquidator has wide powers to act as agent of the company including power to sell the company's assets. Although they can continue the company's business, borrow money and secure it on assets of the company, they can only do so in so far as it may be required for the company's beneficial winding-up and, in practice, a liquidator does so only rarely and is much less likely to be able to sell a business as a going concern than an administrator or administrative receiver. The liquidator is required to prepare a progress report every 12 months to keep creditors informed of the progress of the liquidation.

The powers of the liquidator are set out in Schedule 4 to the Insolvency Act 1986. These powers include: the power to sell the company's property; the power to pay any class of creditors in full; and the power to make any compromise with creditors. The liquidator also has the power to challenge and have set aside antecedent transactions (eg transactions entered into at an undervalue and preferences given) and must investigate the conduct of the directors in the run-up to insolvency, which could lead to the directors being disqualified and/or being liable to contribute to the assets of the company, thereby increasing the assets available for creditors.

Agreeing creditors' claims

One of the key tasks for a liquidator is to agree creditors' claims for the purpose of making distributions. All creditors who wish to claim in the liquidation are required to submit a 'proof of debt' or claim form.³ Creditors may submit a claim not just for actual claims that have arisen, but also for future and contingent claims, unascertained as well as ascertained claims. If claims are denominated in a currency other than pounds sterling, these will be converted into pounds sterling for the purposes of the proof of debt. Unsecured creditors rank pari passu for dividends in equal proportions to their respective claims (including in respect of any funds ring-fenced from floating charge realisations for unsecured creditors, as discussed further below).

Secured creditors can only claim if they surrender their security or claim in respect of any unsecured element of their claim. Because secured creditors can seek their own remedy in the liquidation (including by appointing a receiver), the secured creditor has no vote in a liquidation for their secured debt except to the extent of any shortfall.

A creditor who is also a debtor of the company in liquidation may have the benefit of a right of set-off so that they pay to, or claim from, the insolvent company only the net sum.

In addition to any contractual rights of set-off, a mandatory, automatic statutory set-off in respect of certain "mutual dealings" between the company and the creditor applies as at the date on which the liquidation commences.

³ Except those creditors with small debts which do not exceed GBP1,000. In an MVL, proof of debt is required only if requested by the liquidator.

Distribution

The liquidator is entitled to deduct their remuneration and expenses from the proceeds of the liquidation and is then required to distribute the balance in the following statutory order of priority:

- If the company entered liquidation within 12 weeks of the end of a Part A1 moratorium, any moratorium debts and priority pre-moratorium debts;
- Preferential debts, including, occupational pension scheme contributions and four months' wages to employees, as well as certain unpaid taxes owed to HMRC;⁴
- Funds ring-fenced from floating charge realisations for unsecured creditors on a pro rata and pari passu basis;⁵
- Floating charge creditors (fixed charge creditors will be able to enforce their security, and receive payment, outside the liquidation process and so do not appear in this list of priority);
- Unsecured creditors on a pro rata and pari passu basis;
- Subordinated creditors pursuant to subordination agreements (although there are no classes of creditors who are subordinated as a matter of law, unlike in the United States). The degree of subordination and, therefore, where subordinated creditors rank in the order of priorities depends upon whether the contractual subordination in question is effective and also the terms of such subordination agreement.⁶; and
- Shareholders, according to their rights and interests in the company although shareholders will receive nothing in an insolvent liquidation.

⁶ For example, it is possible for a subordinated creditor to have a floating charge but to agree to be subordinated to other floating charge holders only. Such a floating charge-holder would rank above unsecured creditors

Completion of the liquidation

Once a company's affairs have been wound up (i.e. all the assets realised and claims dealt with), the liquidator, among other things, makes the relevant reports to the shareholders and/or creditors (as applicable), files a return with the Registrar of Companies and vacates office. Unless deferred under certain prescribed circumstances, the company is automatically struck off the register three months after the filing of the return.
