

Attention-Deficit/ Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)

What is ADHD?

ADHD can look like difficulty focusing, having lots of energy, not thinking before acting, or all of these things.

All children and teens may have difficulty with focusing and activity levels at times. However, these issues are more constant for children and teens with ADHD. They can also make things hard at home and school.

How to Support Your Child

Children and teens with ADHD may need therapy, classroom supports, or medications to do their best. Talk to your doctor about your child's needs.

Families can ask the school for extra supports like an Individualized Education Program (IEP) or a 504 Plan. Schools can also give extra help without a plan. This could mean sitting in the front of class, extra time on tests, reminders, breaks, and more.

Help your child build routines and learn how to stay organized.

Give directions in smaller chunks. Give directions for one thing at a time.

Use lots of positive attention for appropriate behavior. Praise any time your child is focused or calm.

Good sleep is important for children and teens with ADHD.

Need Help?

If your family needs more help, talk to your doctor.

If your family needs a mental health provider, call the phone number on the back of your child's insurance card. Ask for a list of covered mental health providers in your area, or search for providers on your insurance website.

Scan below or click here for more information about how to find a mental health provider and how to get help in a crisis.

Pediatric Health Network

 Children's National.