

Autism spectrum disorder
can present itself in many ways

Do you notice irritable behaviors in your child?

A research study is evaluating an investigational drug to determine if it may treat irritability and other behaviors in children and adolescents with autism spectrum disorder (ASD). Patients will be asked to participate for up to 14 weeks.

Study Criteria

To participate in this study, patients must:

- Be 5 to 17 years old
- Be diagnosed with an autism spectrum disorder
- Experience irritable behaviors because of their ASD
- Have a parent or guardian able to participate as a study partner during the entire study
- Be able to swallow a medium-sized capsule

Other eligibility criteria apply. Study participants receive study drug at no cost, and compensation for time and travel may be available.

Contact your local study site

Dr. Adelaide Robb
Children's National Hospital
202-476-6067

This study is actively enrolling.

PenguinAutismStudy.com

