PROPERLY CITING GRANTS

NIH reminds investigators that citing an award in a publication is only required when the grant directly supported the research. Researchers may oversite award unintentionally, leading to confusion. NIH notes issues with overciting such as questions of human subjects research violation for grants not related to the publication. Properly citing is vital so as to ensure funding is attributed correctly. NIH guidance is available if you have questions on citations.

ALLOWABLE COSTS FOR HUMAN SUBJECTS RESEARCH

Are you writing a grant that involves research participants? Have you had a funded project and encountered barriers that allowed your research subjects to participate? If so, your grant may be eligible to budget for costs to assist participants and improve participation. NIH recently created a resource that outlines allowable costs with participant inclusion activities. Some costs include are childcare, incentives, meals, and patient care. If you have questions regarding allowable costs for NIH grant applications, you can find more information here.

REMINDER

December 25- January 2: HCRS staff will be out of the office in observance of the MUS winter break. Proposals due during that time need to be submitted to OSP before 8AM on Friday, December 22nd. If you have a proposal due in early January, please be sure to work with your pre-award representative to ensure timely submission. We hope you have a wonderful extended winter break!
