"When disasters like this happen, it's important that we come together as a community and support one another," said Kevin Johnson, president and CEO of Suncoast Credit Union. "We're proud to stand with our trusted partners providing important assistance to those who need it most."

The three organizations are providing essential resources to those affected by the flooding, including emergency shelter, disaster response services, basic necessities and recovery assistance.

In September, Suncoast merged with Launch Credit Union, based in Brevard and Volusia counties. The merger expanded Suncoast's presence along Florida's Space Coast while carrying forward Launch's longstanding legacy of serving and supporting the people and communities of the region, especially in times of need.
